PARTNER PROFILE: CAM-DEX SECURITY CORP.

Celebrating its 60th year as one of the Midwest's leading security systems integrators, Cam-Dex Security Corp. has witnessed myriad changes in this fast-paced industry and has grown along with it.

When the company first began business in 1957, one of the core services provided for its customers was photographing the check-cashing process in retail and financial institutions as a means of gathering visual evidence in case there was a problem with a check. Today, Cam-Dex's camera work is in the hightech realm of IP video, which is offers to customers along with access control products, ID badging systems, mass notification solutions and one of its newest product areas, suicide prevention equipment.

Cam-Dex, serves its customer base from sales and service offices in Kansas City, Kan., and St. Louis, Mo., is known not just for the wide range of products on offer from leading security manufacturers, but also for its fullservice approach to a project. The company is just as comfortable building out a security operations center as it is designing the system that goes into that room.

Part of that confidence comes from having factory-certified technicians who are well trained on the all of the equipment being sold and installed by Cam-Dex. The company, which is under the leadership of President and CEO John Krumme, specializes in providing stand-alone and networked security solutions for clients in the healthcare and manufacturing fields as well as government.

"As a service-centric company, we're passionate about giving our customers the best experience possible," said Krumme. "We're committed to meeting our clients' specific needs and have developed the business infrastructure to make that happen, including being part of Security-Net, which gives us the ability to support our customers anywhere within the United States and beyond."
